On to, onto (p. ntũ), prep. [The adv. ON + the prep. To, used to express the notion conveyed in OE. by on prep with the accusative, and often in ME. and mod. Eng. by on with simple objective upon, after certain verbs, e.g. 'to jump on deck'.]

On to thus has the same relation to on that into has to in. But while in to, into, was in use already by 900, the need for on to, onto appears not to have been felt before the 16th c., while its written recognition as a combination is still quite recent and limited. Yet, in the sense in which it corresponds to into, onto is in speech a real compound, the n being shortened by its rapid passage into the allied mute t, while in on to, into, as two words, the n is long and does not glide into the t. But by most writers on to is avoided, or used only when ambiguity cannot be otherwise avoided (cf. quotes.

1777, 1837, 1863, 1870, 1873, 1881).

On to, onto, in this sense, must be carefully distinguished, first, from a ME onto, a frequent scribal variant of into;

and, secondly, from modern instances in which on, as the extension of a vb., is followed by to as a separate word, e.g.

to walk on to the next station, to flow on to the sea, to hang on to a party, to lead on to another point; a ship lies broadside on to the waves. Here the two words are no more connected than in up to, down to, out to, away to, back to, home to. Some who write or print onto have carelessly misused it in such connexions.]

Opportunism (opp'rtū'niz'm, opp'rtū'niz'm), [f. OPPORTUNE, after It. opportunismo, f. opportunus - see -ISM] The policy of doing what is opportune, or at the time expedient, in politics, as opposed to rigid adherence to party principles, often used to imply sacrifice of principle or an undue spirit of accommodation to present circumstances.

A term first of Italian, and then of French politics, which in English use has been extended to characterize any method or course of action by which a party or person adapts himself to, and seeks to make profitable use of, the circumstances of the moment. (The introduction of the word has often been erroneously ascribed to Gambetta.)

1870 Contemp. Rev. XV. 389 To lead the [Italian] people away from the idea of unity as Utopian, and induce them [i.e. Cavour and others in 1844] to enter upon the path of compromise, or 'opportunism', to use their own term 1880 19th Cent. Apr. 632 Among Nonconformists there is not one who has less of the spirit of opportunism than Mr. Illingworth 1881 Standard 27 May, He [Gambetta] is likewise a master of effect, an adept in the craft of Opportunism in a wider sense than he himself has ever publicly ascribed to a word of his own invention 1882 A. W. WARD Dickens III. 69 The Daily News was to rise superior to the opportunism .. of the Times 1885 Ld. GRANVILLE Sp. at Hanley 6 Nov. (Times 7 Nov.), I asked an Englishman, I asked a Frenchman, I asked an Italian what was opportunism. The Englishman said that he thought opportunism was the preference of expediency to principle. The French gentleman said he thought it was the coquetting with principles which you do not approve in your heart The Italian said it was adapting yourself to those circumstances which were most fitted to get you into power and to maintain you there. 1886 G. ALLEN Darwin vii 124 The dry and cautious French intelligence, ever inclined to a scientific opportunism. 1898 BODLEY France II. iv vi 407 Opportunism in its wholesome sense is the art of adapting one's self to changing circumstances.

Opportunism (opp'rtū'niz'm, opp'rtū'niz'm), [f. as prec. + -ISM; in F. opportunisme.] One who professes or practises opportunism in politics, or in any sphere of action; spec. in French politics, a member of the party led by Gambetta (see quot. 1881); also, one who, at the Vatican Council of 1870, held that the time was opportune for the promulgation of the doctrine of Papal Infallibility. (cf. IN-OPPORTUNIST)

1881 Contemp. Rev. Oct. 624 The term Opportunist was first applied to him [Gambetta] by Rochefort, in an article in the Droits de l'homme, published in February, 1876 1881 AUBERSON HERBERT in Times 29 Sept. 3/6 The opportunist is the man who says 'I would not, but I must' He yields to what he condemns, to what he thinks neither right nor just but what, as he claims, is justified and felicit upon him by circumstances 1882-3 SCHAFF Encycl. Optimism (optimizm). [a. F. optimisme; in mod. L. optimismus, f. L. optimus best: see -ISM.]

1. A name given to the doctrine propounded by Leibnitz, in his Théodicée (1710), that the actual world is the 'best of all possible worlds', being chosen by the Creator out of all the possible worlds which were present in his thoughts as that in which the most good could be obtained at the cost of the least evil. Also applied to doctrines of earlier or later thinkers to a like effect.

Leibnitz, in his Théodicée, uses optimum as a technical term, on the model of maximum and minimum. Hence the Jesuits who conducted the Mémoires de Trévoux, in the number for Feb. 1737, gave to his doctrine the name optimisme. It appears in the Dict. Trévoux 1752. It owes its general diffusion to the attack upon the doctrine by Voltaire in Candide on l'Optimisme 1759; and was admitted into the Dict. Acad. in 1762.

Philos.* ii. 11 (1801) 213 By some modern authors the scheme of optimism has been proposed in a form which leads to a justification of moral evil, even with respect to the delinquent. 1842 BRANDE Diet Sci., etc., s. v. The optimism of Leibnitz was based on the following trilemma—If this world be not the best possible, God must either, 1. not have known how to make a better, 2. not have been able, 3. not have chosen. The first proposition contradicts his omniscience, the second his omnipotence, the third his benevolence.

b. More generally applied to any view which supposes the ultimate predominance of good over evil in the universe.

Or (pñ, pi, pñ), adv. [prep., conj.] arch. and dial Forms: see below, and cf. AIB adv. [OE. ar adv. (late Northumb.) : cf. ON. ar, Goth. air, OE. ær, OTeut. air* (?) and airi*: see ERE. In early ME. ær, are, later ör, ore, oore. But in all the uses exc. A. 1 the sense is that of the comparative, OE. ær, Goth. airis, OHG. ær earlier, sooner, before.

The solitary O. Northumb. instance of adv. ar in A. I, with Oimin's ær, the ær, are of Cursor M., and Sc. are, AIB, can only be from the ON. positive adv. ar 'early'. To the same origin must be assigned, so far as form goes, the Early ME. and North. ær, midl. ör, in A. II (ær having assumed an adverbial -e, as in there, where, etc.) But the sense here is that of the OE. comparative ær, ME. ör, ere as ær existed side by side with ör in the positive, it may have intruded also into the comparative, in which ær, Ere, from OE. ær, was the only etymological form. In this sense Sc. still has AIB B and C have, beside ör, ere, the form or in midl. (before 1225) In 13-14th c. or (are) is found in the north, but appears soon to have been displaced by the midl. ör, which is still the ordinary northern word. The northern texts of Cursor M. have the prepositional and conjunctive ar (are); but or occurs also in the Cott. text, and is frequent in Fairfax. In Sc., Bearder finds the prep. or at first only in Barbour (Ueber den Gebrauch der Präpositionen in der altscott. Poesie, Halle 1894, p. 43). Ar (are) occurs also in 13-14th c. southern writings; there it may have originated in an unstressed form of OE. ær. The relations between the positive and comparative of this adv. present complications in all the cognate langs. In all the WGer. group, also, the comparative has developed prepositional and conjunctive uses, as in English.]

B. Signification.

1. generally. A particle co-ordinating two (or more) words, phrases, or clauses, between which there is an alternative.

Things so co-ordinated may differ in nature, or quality, or merely in quantity, in which case the one may include the other, as in 'it will cost a pound or thirty shillings', 'two or three minutes', 'a word or two'. The second member may also express a correction or modification of the first, which may be strengthened by expanding or to or even, or rather, or at least.

b. When singular subjects (sb. or pron.) are co-ordinated by or, strict logic and the rules of modern grammarians require the vb. and following pronouns to be singular; but at all times there has been a tendency to use the plural with two or more singular subjects when their mutual exclusion is not emphasized.

When the subjects differ in number or person, the rule is that the vb. and pronouns should agree with the last or nearest, e.g. 'I or thou art to blame', 'I, or thou, or he is the author of it' (Lindley Murray); but such constructions are apt to seem stiff and pedantic, and are consequently avoided. The question of gender causes further complication—esp the want of a 3rd pers. pron. of common gender. To say either 'if he or she has his friends with him' or 'if he or she has her friends with her' may be misleading, while 'if he or she has his or her friends with him or her' is clumsy and pedantic, which is avoided by saying 'have their friends with them'; so 'Your brother or sister will lend their aid'. These difficulties appear to have been felt at all times, and have been sometimes avoided by making the verb immediately precede or follow the first subject, and agree with it.

2. The alternative expressed by or is emphasized by prefixing to the first member, or adding after the last, the associated adverb EITHER, formerly OTHER or OUTER (the latter still in dialect use): e.g. 'you may have either an apple or a pear', 'I could eat an apple or a pear either'.

The primary function of either, etc., is to emphasize the perfect indifference of the two (or more) things or courses, e.g. 'you may take either the medal or its value' = the medal and its value are equally at your option, you may take either; but a secondary function is to emphasize the mutual exclusiveness, = either of the two, but not both. For full illustration, see EITHER, OTHER, OUTER; the following are early examples of the various forms

Or-, pref., frequent in OE., retained in a few words in ME., now obs. exc. in ORDEAL, and perh. ORT-S, where it is no longer recognized as a significant element. OE. or- was the stressed form (used in nominal compounds), corresp. to Goth. us-, ur-, ON. ör-, or-, OHG. ur-, OS. ur-, or-, MDu. or-, oor-, Du. oor-, orig. an adv. and prep. meaning 'out'. The unstressed form (in verbal compounds) was in OHG. ur-, ar-, ir-, MHG. MLG, MDu., Ger., Du. er-, OS. OE. a-. Thus OE. ordal, OS. urðel, MDu. ordeel, MLG. ordel, OHG. urteil, Ger. urteil decision, judgement; OE. adēlan, OS. aðþan, OHG. arteilen, Ger. erteilen to decide, allot, share. The primary sense was 'out', as in Goth. and OHG. úrrunn 'outrunning, exit, exodus', ON. úrfor out-going, departure; thence various derived senses, of which OE. had 'out, completely, to an end', as in orþanc 'thinking out, contrivance, skill, intelligence'; 'out and out', 'extreme', in origella 'extreme old age'; 'outwardly, manifestly', in orcnēwe 'recognizable', orgate 'clearly perceptible, manifest'; and esp. 'without, void of, bereft of', as in the adjs. ormēte 'measureless, immense', ormōd 'bereft of courage, despairing', orðwile 'lifeless', orwēne 'without hope, desperate', ortrowe 'without trust, faithless', orworg 'without anxiety, secure'. (Cf. L. adjs. in ex-, as exanimus, exors, exosis, exsanguis.) In this last sense the prefix survived in early ME.: see ORMETE, ORMOD, ORRATH, ORTROW.

-OR, a termination of words, and form of various suffixes, of Latin origin.

Latin long o in early OF was represented by a close sound between (ø) and (ə), written variously o and u, as in L. honore, OF. onor, onour. In AngloFr. the sound sank into (ə) and came c. 1300 to be written ou (onour). In continental Fr., on the other hand, the sound passed at length into eu = è (onour, honneur). The earliest adopted words in ME. had o or u (onor, onour), but the regular representation after 1300 was that of AngloFr. ou (onour, honour). In many instances this is still retained; but, at the Renaissance, many of the -our words, which in other respects were like their L. originals, were conformed to the L. in -or; and nearly all words taken then or later directly from L. were spelt -or, though, even in these words, there was at first a considerable vacillation between -or and -our. In Great Britain the traditional -our is still retained in many of the words in which it was retained in the 16th c., though not a few of these, as ancestor, author, error, horror, prior, senator, tailor, are now spelt with -or, which spelling is extended in American usage to all the -our words.

This termination appears in the following suffixes:

1. -or (formerly often -our), representing ultimately L. -or, -ōrem, in nouns of condition from intr. vbs. in -ere, less usually from other vbs., as error, horror, liquor, pallor, stupor, tenor, terror, torpor, tremor, etc. Such of these as existed in ME. were formerly spelt with -our, e.g. error, horror, licour, tenour. In other words of the same class, as ardour, favour, fervour, humour, labour, rigour, valour, vigour, as also in some words not directly connected with extant L. verbs, as colour, honour, odour, -our is generally retained in British usage, but American usage spells these also with -or. ardor, favor, labor, color, honor, etc.

2. -or (formerly often -our), repr. L. -or, -ōrem of agent-nouns, formed on stems identical with the ppl. or 'supine' stems of verbs. Of these there are three varieties.

a. Those repr. L. agent-nouns other than those in -ātor, -ōtor, -itor, -itor; as actor, assessor, author, captor, censor, confessor, doctor, elector, extensor, factor, flexor, inventor, lactor, oppressor, pastor, possessor, professor, rektor, sculptor, sponsor, successor, transgressor, tutor, victor. These are of different ages, going back to OF. words in -or, -ur, AF. in -our = F. -eur, or L. in -or. So far as they existed in ME., they were then spelt -our, e.g. actour, assessor, author, censour, confessor, detour, doctor, etc.; they are now all conformed to the L. spelling in -or.

b. Agent-nouns in L. -ātor, -ōtor, -itor, -itor, in coming down in living use into OF., were regularly reduced from -ātor-em, etc., through -edor to -or, -ētor, AF. -eur, which became in ME. -our, and in F. -eur, and thus fell together with those from simple -ōr-em in a. Such are barrator, cessor, (:-cessator-em), conqueror, donor, emperor (imperator-em), governor, juror, lessor, solicitor, vendor, visitor (visitator-em). To this group also belongs saviour (AF. saumveur—OF. salvōr, salvador, L. salvātor-em), which has preserved the vowel before -our. To these may be added agent-nouns formed in Fr. or AF. on the vb. stem, in imitation of those in -ōr, -eur, -our, repr. L. -ātor-em, etc., as purveyor, surveyor, tailor, grantor, warrior (AF. werreyour, i. werrier to war). From want of evidence it is sometimes uncertain whether the agent-noun was already formed in late L. in -ātor, -itor, or in Fr. after these suffixes had been reduced to -or and -eur, AF. -our.

c. Agent-nouns in -ātor, -ōtor, -itor, -itor, -itor, adopted in later times in Fr. or in Eng. retain t, appearing in French as -ateur, -iteur, etc., and have now in Eng. the same written form as in L., e.g. administator, agitator, creator, curator, dictator, equator, gladiator, imitator, legislator, navigator, spectator, translator, vindicatōr, orator, procurator, senator; auditor, creditor, editor, famitor, monitor, servitor; executor. These are of different ages: some from OF. or AF. (in which case they formerly had -our, as creatur, creditor, dictatur, oratur, servitour), some of later formation immediately from L., which have had the -or form from the first. The pronunciation varies greatly, the stress being sometimes as in the L. nominative (creatur, creditor), sometimes on the second syllable before the stressed vowel of the AF. and L. accusative (on which a secondary stress fell originally in ME.), as in au ditor (au ditor r, au ditor rem), o' ratur (o' ratur r, o' ratur rem), se nator (se nator r, se nator rem), se rator (se rator r, se rator rem), exe cutor (exe cutor r, exe cutor rem), sometimes corresponding with that of the Eng. vb., as administator, agitator, immitator, pro secutor, or otherwise shifted, as pro curator. In some cases two forms exist, as curator after L. nom., curator after curator r, curator rem.

d. -or is sometimes an alteration of another suffix, as of L. -ārius, F. -er, AF. -er, in bachelor, chancellor, heritor, or of Eng. -er:—OE. -ere, in sailor, betlor.

The frequent occurrence of ME. -our, mod. -or, in legal terms denoting the person acting, as opposed to the person acted upon in -e, e.g. lessor lessee, grantor grantee, mortgageor mortgagee, has imparted a kind of technical or professional character to the ending, and explains the differentiation of sailor, one who sails professionally, from sailer. In ME. there was a tendency to confuse the endings -er and -our (helped prob. by the OF. declension nom. -e — L. -ātor, acc. or, ur, eur, L. -ātor-em), thus butcher, dicer, fletcher, faller, jester, juggler, porter, etc. are found also with the ending our. On the other hand, in a large number of words, the original -our, or has, since the 15th c., been exchanged for the -or of agent-nouns of English derivation, such as barber, broker, chanter, dwainer, labourer, pleader, preacher, robber, rimer or rhymer, in all which the earlier -our, or, is the etymological form.

3. -or (-our) sometimes represents F. -oir, from various sources, as manor, OF. manoir, manere, L. manēre; murror, F. murir, *L. mūrītōrium; so with -our, parlor, F. parloir, *L. parabolātōrium.

4. -or, repr. ME. and AF. -our, F. -eur, L. -or, -ōrem, a variant of -ior, suffix of the comparative degree of adjs., in major, minor. See -ior 2.

ORA (ōrā). Hist. [OE., app. ad. ON. pyrr or its pl. aurar: commonly regarded as ad. L. aure—us golden; but the sense-history is not clear. Cf. ORE 4.]

Orange (p'endz), sb 2

1. The name of a town on the river Rhone in France, formerly the capital of a small principality of the same name, which passed in 1530 into the possession of the House of Nassau, and so to the ancestors of William III of England, styled princes of Orange-Nassau. On the death of William III, the territory of Orange was acquired by Louis XIV, and added to France; but the title continued to be held by the cousin of William and his descendants, who now constitute the royal line of Holland. In Eng. Hist., 'William of Orange' is an appellation of William III.

The accidental coincidence of this name with that of the fruit and colour (ORANGE sb 1), made the wearing of orange ribbons, scarfs, cockades, orange-lilies, etc., a symbol of attachment to William III, and to the principles of the Revolution settlement of 1689, and led to their use by the Orange lodges and Orangemen.

1558-9 CLOUGH *Descr. 2 Eng. Hist. (attrib) Applied to the ultra-Protestant party in Ireland, in reference to the secret Association of Orangemen formed in 1795 cf. ORANGEMAN.

The exact origin of this use of 'Orange' is somewhat obscure. But it is supposed that 'the two Copes' of quot. 1795 were members of a celebrated lodge of Freemasons then existing in Belfast, styled 'The Orange Lodge', and that thence their adherents were known as 'Orange boys' and 'Orangemen'. The name of this lodge probably had reference to William of Orange, or to the use of orange badges at the anniversaries at which his memory was celebrated; and it was, no doubt, in this sense that the term became perpetuated as a party name. The first two quot. which follow refer to the Orange Lodge of Freemasons.

[1793 in Joy Hist. Coll. Belfast (1871), The procession was conducted by the Orange Lodge, so confessedly acknowledged to be the first in Europe, being composed of 250 gentlemen, noblemen and commoners of the very first distinction. The Orange Lodge was first revived in Sept 1780, at which time it consisted merely of the present Past-Master and two other gentlemen. 1791 C. T. Orange-blossom. The white fragrant blossom of the orange-tree. Worn by brides in wreaths, trimmings, etc., or carried in bouquets at the marriage ceremony.

This custom appears to have been introduced from France c. 1820-30. According to Littré, 'Women at their marriage wear a crown of orange buds and blossoms; hence the orange-blossom is taken as a symbol of marriage' (Thackeray's explanation of the symbolism appears to be his own).

The English Ordainers, or Lords Ordainers of modern historians, has not been found in contemporary writings, and was apparently unknown to the 16th c. chroniclers.

repr. of OE ordl, -dél, a Comm. Teutonic word: in OFris. ordel, ordel, OS urdél (MDu. ordeel, MLG ordel, Du ordeel), OHG. urteil (MHG. urteil, urteil, mod. Ger urteil) (all neut., but in OHG. urteil, also fem.) judgement, judicial decision, thence med. L. ordellum, ordella, OF ordel (Diz.), F. ordalie. The sb, of which the OTeut. type would be urdailjom*, is a nominal compound, belonging to a compound vb of Goth. type urdailjan*, in OHG. artulan, urteulan, MHG. and Ger erteilen, OS adéljan, OE. adélan, lit. 'to deal out', 'allot in shares'; hence 'to allot or adjudge to one his share, decide, give judgement'. The sb has come down in the cognate langs in the general sense of 'judgement, judicial decision', but in OE had become restricted, in historical times, to ancient modes of trial which survived from an earlier stage of society.

The word has not been found in ME, except in a single instance in Chaucer's Troilus (perh from Latin or French). Its modern historical use began c. 1575, partly as an Englishing of med. L. ordellum, partly as an adaptation of the OE word. The true repr of OE ordl would be ordale, the received spelling ordale appears 1605 in Verstegan, who associates the word with deal 'part' (OE dél) 'Or is heer understood for due or right, deal, for parte, as yet wee use it, so as ordale, is as much as to say as due-part, and at this present it is a word generally used in Germany, & the Netherlands, in steed of dome or judgement' (Dec. Intell. in 63). Ignorance of the etymological relationship has led to the pronunciation or-de-al, as in boréal, cereal, lunéal.

1. An ancient mode of trial among the Teutonic peoples, retained in England till after the Norman Period, in which an accused or suspected person was subjected to some physical test fraught with danger, such as the plunging of the hand in boiling water, the carrying of hot iron, walking barefoot and blindfold between red-hot ploughshares, etc., the result being regarded as the immediate judgement of the Deity. Hence applied to analogous modes of determining innocence or guilt, still practised in various parts of the East, and among the less civilized races generally.

With the exception of wager of battle, which is sometimes included in the class, the various forms of ordeal were abolished in England 1215-19.

Many senses of the word had been developed before it was adopted in OF and Eng. The order of the appearance of the senses here is consequently not that of their logical development in L., ancient and mediæval. The specific senses of 'order of angels' and 'monastic order' appear in the Ancien Riwle, nearly all the ecclesiastical uses, with that of 'a rank of the community', are found by 1300; but the primary sense of 'row or rank' appears first in the 16th c. The arrangement here followed is in many points merely provisional.]

5. Each of the nine ranks or grades of angels, according to mediæval angelology. Also, any analogous class of spiritual or demonic beings.

The nine orders of angels are enumerated first in the Pseudo-Dionysius (4th c.), according to which there are three hierarchies, each including three orders: these are seraphim, cherubim, thrones; dominations, principalities, powers, virtues, archangels, angels. (The names are derived from the mention of cherubim and seraphim in the O.T., and from words used by St. Paul in enumerating things in heaven and in the earth, in Coloss. 1. 16, Ephes. 1. 21.)

6. Eccle. a. A grade or rank in the Christian ministry, or in an ecclesiastical hierarchy.

The orders of the unreformed Western Church are those of bishop, priest, deacon, subdeacon, acolyte, exorcist, reader, and ostiarus or door-keeper, variously counted as eight or seven, according as bishop is or is not considered a distinct order from priest. Those of bishop, priest, deacon, and (since 15th c.) subdeacon, are the greater, sacred, or holy orders, the others are the minor orders. The Anglican Church recognizes only the three holy orders of bishop, priest, and deacon. In most branches of the Eastern Church the orders recognized are those of bishop, priest, deacon, subdeacon, and anagnost or reader, to which some add that of singer (ψαλμῆς).

b. The rank, status, or position of a clergyman or ordained minister of the Church. Now always pl., more fully holy orders. Hence the phrases to take orders, to enter the ministry of the Church, to be ordained; in orders, in the position of an ordained clergyman or minister of the Church; in deacon's orders, in priest's or full orders.

This has some affinities with sense 3 (see quot. 1597 from Hooker there). But the pl. form in holy orders, to be in orders, to take orders, etc. evidently refers to the different orders within the ministry, rather than to the ministerial or clerical order as a class or body of men.

These constitute the Five Orders of Classical Architecture, rising above each other in relative height, lightness, and decoration, viz. the Tuscan, Doric, Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite, of which the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian are the original Greek orders, the Tuscan and Composite, Roman modifications or varieties.

Hist. the decrees of the Ordainers (with the king's assent) in 1310 were 'ordinances'; the name is also given to the Ordinance of the Forest (33 & 34 Ed. I), and the Ordinance of the Staple (27 Ed. III, st. 2), etc. The Acts of the Long Parliament after 1641 were at first called Ordinances; one of these was the Self-denying Ordinance of 1645, ordaining that no member of parliament should thenceforth hold any civil or military office. After 1649 the name 'act' was officially used; but all these 'acts' were expunged from the Statute-book at the Restoration, they are usually referred to as 'ordinances'. In reference to French History, 'the Ordinances' are esp. those of Charles X. in 1830, overthrowing the constitution, and suspending the liberty of the press. See also ORDONNANCE 2, 2b. 1393 *R. 3. The public establishment, or branch of the public service, concerned with the supply of military stores and materials, the management of the artillery, etc.

Board of Ordnance, a board, partly military and partly civil, which had the management of all affairs relating to the artillery, engineers, and the matériel of the Army; it was under the direction of a Master-General, assisted by a Lieutenant-General, a Surveyor-General, a Principal Storekeeper, Clerks of the Ordnance, and various other officers. After having existed from the reign of Henry VIII, it was dissolved in 1855, most of its functions as regards matériel being now discharged by the Army Ordnance Department.

The organization of the Ordnance Department has undergone numerous transformations since 1855. From 1870 to 1887, the Surveyor-General of Ordnance was (with the Commander-in-Chief, and the Financial Secretary) one of three officers to whom the actual army administration was then delegated, his province being all civil administrative duties except the Pay Department, with the purchase, construction, and charge of matériel. After 1887 these duties were divided among various officials, e.g. the Commissary-General of Ordnance Stores, Director-General of Ordnance Factories, etc. In 1895 they were once more grouped under an Inspector-General of Ordnance, for whom a Director-General was substituted by an Order in Council of 7 March, 1899.

Ore ² (ōi). Forms. a. 1 ōra, 4 ore, 5-7 oore, 5-6 oure, 6 (ower, owre), ur, 6-7 ure; ß. It would appear that, about the 12th c., OE. dr began to be identified in sense with OE. dra, and that forms descended from both continued side by side until the 17th c., when the forms from dra became obs., or were levelled under those from dr. Thus the mod. Eng. word appears to derive its sense from OE. dra, but its form from OE. dr 'brass', which may have been extended to the sense 'metal', and thus to 'ore'. It is possible that, in very modern Eng., the form oor might itself have passed into (ōi), as in the spoken forms of door, floor, and southern pronunc. of moor, poor; but this would not explain the double forms from 13th to 17th c., nor the 16th c. oar]

In Greek, org 'that with which one works' (ablaut formation from erō-work), tool, instrument, spec. musical instrument, surgical instrument, also bodily organ as instrument of sense or faculty. In L., instrument, engine, musical instrument generally, pipe, in Christian writers also 'church-organ'. Augustine (c. 400), on Ps. lvi, says 'All musical instruments are called organum'. Not alone is that called organum, which is large and inflated by bellows, but whatever is fitted to accompany singing, and is corporeal, which he who sings uses as an instrument, is called organum'. To the same effect Isidore Orig. II. xx. In Eng. adopted first in the musical sense, in OE. in the more general sense of 'musical instrument', including, no doubt, that of 'church-organ'.]

I. A musical instrument.

2. spec. A musical instrument (in its modern form the largest and most comprehensive of all), consisting of a number of pipes, supplied with wind or compressed air by means of bellows, and sounded by means of keys, which on being pressed down admit the wind to the pipes by opening valves or pallets.

In the modern organ the pipes are distributed into sets or stops of various qualities of tone, the admission of wind to the several stops being controlled by handles or draw-stops, drawn in and out by hand or by mechanism worked by special pedals (combination pedals), and the stops are arranged in groups, each separate group forming a partial organ (see d) and being controlled by a separate keyboard; these are usually from two to five in number, one of the key-boards consisting of pedals played with the feet, the rest being manually played with the hands, these can be connected in various ways by complers so as to sound together. From its power and dignity of tone the organ has been distinctively the church instrument from early Christian times, and in modern times is also used in concert-halls and other buildings.

The instrument has of course undergone immense changes since the 4th c., when it is first referred to in L. writers, and even since the date of the earliest Eng references. According to Grove's Dict Mus. II, 576, 'At the commencement of the 8th c. the use of the organ was appreciated, and the art of making it was known in England'. But although mentioned from that period in Latin documents, no English quot. specifically in this sense are known in OE or Early ME.

Of these the chief is the great organ, containing stops mostly of powerful tone, the others are the choir organ, containing lighter stops used for accompanying a choir (see CHOIR-ORGAN), the (formerly used) echo organ, inclosed in a case, for producing a soft and distant effect, and its successor the swell organ, inclosed in a swell-box capable of being opened or shut by a swell pedal so as to produce crescendo or diminuendo effects, the solo organ, in which each stop is of special quality of tone, adapted for playing a solo melody accompanied by other stops, and the pedal organ, containing the stops of lowest pitch, forming a bass to the manuals.

-orial, a compound suffix, consisting of the suffix -AL, L, -al-is, added to L, -ori-us, -a, -um (see -ORY). The termination is originally adjectival (substantival only by ellipsis), and app arose in connexion with sbs in -orium, -orius, Eng. -ORY; thus late L had territori-al-is from territorium. But it has been extended in Eng to form derivatives from L adjs in -torius, -sorius, from agent-nouns in -tor, -sor, as cursori-al, dictatori-al, pictori-al, piscatori-al, procuratori-al, professori-al, sartori-al, senatori-al, and others formed directly on agent-nouns themselves or on the cognate ppl stem of the vb, as equatori-al, mediatori-al. In sense, these adjs. in -orial are usually identical with those in -ory, and the two forms are not rarely found side by side (e.g. piscatori-al, piscatory); but the former is preferred for the adj when there is a sb. in -ory (purgatory, purgatori-al). Words in -orial from agent-nouns are chiefly of Eng formation, the compound suffix being rare in Fr.

Oriel (ōriēl). Also 5 oryel, oriell, 5-6 oryall, 6-8 oriall, 7 orial, oryal, 7-8 oriol, (9 oriole) [ME a. OF oriol (eurient, oeurient) (in Godefroy) 'porch, passage, corridor, gallery', med L (? from Fr.) orolum (in Matt Paris, a 1259) 'porch, entrance-hall, antechamber']

Of unknown origin - for the conjecture that the F or med L might be altered from L aurolum 'golden, gilded', in sense 'gilded chamber', there is no historical foundation, the Fr forms in eu, en point to an original ō not au.

Although much research has been expended upon the history of this word, and esp upon the development of the current use in oriel window, the sense-history remains in many points obscure and perplexed. Mr W. Hamper in an exhaustive article in Archæologia XXIII (1831) 114, asserts, and app proves, for oriel the senses, penthouse, porch (attached to an edifice), (detached) gatehouse, loft, upper floor, gallery (for minstrels). It is also shown in Parker's Domest Archit., that the name was applied to a gallery or upper chamber in the west end of a domestic chapel, or to a small private apartment having a window looking into the chapel (see also Bentley's Qu Rev 1860 Jan 497). The earliest sense known is that of 'portico, passage, corridor, gallery', assumed from OFr (Godef) and med L, and it is probable that 'oriel window' meant at first 'window in a gallery or balcony'. Most of the earlier senses claimed by Mr Hamper are found only in L context, examples in Eng being scarce. The modern Cornish use of oriel is however an important link.

2. A succulent herbaceous plant, Sedum Telephium, with smooth fleshy leaves and corymbs of numerous purple flowers; a native of Britain, and also a well-known inmate of the cottage garden, being esteemed as a vulnerary. From its tenacity of life, one of its popular names is Love-long.

The connexion between this and the preceding sense is not clear; it has been conjectured that the name orpine was given first on account of their colour to one or more of the yellow stonecrops, was extended to the genus Sedum as a whole, and was subseq. restricted to S. Telephium. In support of this, Littré gives orpin as a generic name for Sedum, and calls S. Telephium, orpin repense, and S. acre (Wall Pepper) orpin acre, but Hatzfeld and Darmesteter know only the former as orpin.

2 In Chemistry. Ortho- is used to distinguish one class of acids and their salts from another denoted by the prefix meta-, which contain the same elements in different proportions, the meta- acid containing a molecule of H₂O less than the ortho- acid, the ortho- salt being also the more basic and the meta- salt the less basic. Thus orthophosphoric acid H₃PO₄, metaphosphoric acid HPO₃; sodium orthophosphate Na₂PO₄, sodium metaphosphate NaPO₃. So orthosilicic, orthotungstic, orthosilicate, orthotungstate, etc. This use of ortho- originated with Prof. Odling in 1859, meta- having been introduced by Graham in 1833.

b With the names of isomeric benzene derivatives, ortho- is applied to those in which two consecutive hydrogen atoms are replaced by another element or radical, as distinguished from meta- and para- derivatives, in which the two atoms are not consecutive, but unsymmetrically or symmetrically dispersed respectively. Examples orthodibromobenzene, orthobromotoluene, orthopropylphenol, orthoxylene. (This was introduced by Koerner, 1867, in Brussels Acad. Sc. Bull. XXIV. 166-185.)

As ortho-, although usually prefixed without a hyphen, has always its own distinct meaning, chemical names in ortho- are not separately treated in this Dictionary.

1859 ODLING in L. E. & D. Philos. Mag. Ser. IV. XXVII. 358 On Ortho- and Meta-silicates. Intermediate between common or orthophosphates and metaphosphates we have several varieties of compounds, among which the best defined are the pyrophosphates, salts which result from the union of an atom of orthophosphate with an atom of metaphosphate. 1868 WATTS Dict. Chem. IV. 238 The prefixes ortho- and meta- have been introduced to denote two classes of salts, the more basic salts being called ortho- and the less basic, meta- salts. 1873 — Powens' Chem. (ed. 11) 225 The aqueous solution deposits orthophosphoric acid in prismatic crystals. 1876 HARLEY Mat. Med. (ed. 6) 66 Neutral solutions of the orthophosphates give precipitates with salts of lime and baryta. 1877 WATTS Powens' Chem. II. 422 The derivatives of benzene exhibit three such modifications which are distinguished by the prefixes ortho, meta, and para: thus. Orthodichlorobenzene, 1, 2, C₆H₄Cl₂HHHH; Metadichlorobenzene, 1, 3, C₆H₄Cl₂HHHH; Paradichlorobenzene, 1, 4, C₆H₄Cl₂HHHH.

Orthocentre (ὀρθοκέντρον) Geom. [f. ORTHO- + ΚΕΝΤΡΟΝ.] The point at which the perpendiculars from the angles of a triangle on the opposite sides intersect.

1809 BRISANT Conic Sect. 131 If a rectangular hyperbola circumscribe a triangle, it passes through the orthocentre. 1885 LEUDESCHOR Cremona's Proj. Geom. 273 The directrices of all parabolas inscribed in a given triangle meet in the same point, viz. the orthocentre of the triangle.

ORTHO- 'right, correct' + Gr. κεφαλή head + -IO: cf. cephalic.] Applied to skulls of which the breadth is from about $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ of the length (intermediate between brachycephalic and dolichocephalic); or, according to some, of which the height is from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ of the length, of which the height is $\frac{1}{2}$ of the breadth.

1865 LUBBOCK Preh. Times v (1869) 129 Now if we class those skulls in which the relation of the breadth to the length is from 74-79 to 100 as medium heads, . Orthocephalic. 1866 HUXLEY Prehist. Rem. Canth. 88 The skull is orthocephalic, the cephalic index being 0.76.

So Orthocephalous (-σεφάλης), a. = prec.; Orthocephaly, the condition of being orthocephalic.

1874 DAWKINS Cave Hunt. vi 101 In the round barrows they belong mainly to the third division, although some are orthocephalous. 1891 Syd Soc. Lex., Orthocephaly, the condition of a skull which, according to the Frankfurt agreement, possesses a vertical index of from 70° to 75°. According to Welcker, an orthocephalous skull is one whose height is to its width as 10 to 8.

Hence Orthoceran (ὀρθοκέραν) a., belonging to the Orthoceras.

1884 Science III 127/1 Evidence that the Ammonoidea, with their distinct embryos, arose from the orthoceran stock.

Orthoceratite (ὀρθοκεράτιτις). Also in Lat. form orthoceratites (ὀρθοκεράτιτις) [f. as prec + -ITE¹.] A fossil shell of the genus Orthoceras or family Orthoceratidae; also, an animal of this genus or family.

1754 Phil. Trans. XLVIII 804 The orthoceratites is a small conical shell, ending in a point. 1786 Ibid. LXXVI 445 Belemnites, orthoceratites, and so on, are all sea animals. 1871 HARTWIG *Subterr. attrib. 1853 Tr. Ross Humboldt's Trav. III. xxxii 376 The orthoceratite limestone of the Alleghanies.

Hence Orthoceratitic (ὀρθοκεράτιτικ) a., pertaining to or resembling an orthoceratite. So also Orthoceratoid (-σεράτιοειδ) a. = orthoceratitic, sb. = orthoceratite.

Orthochromatic (ὀρθοχρωματικός), a. Photogr. [f. ORTHO- 'correct, proper' + Gr. χρωματικός relating to colour, CHROMATIC] Representing colours in their correct relations, i. e. without exaggerating the deepness of some and the brightness of others (as in ordinary photography).

So Orthochromatism (-κρωματισμός), the condition of being orthochromatic; Orthochromatize v trans., to render orthochromatic.

1889 Anthony's Photogr. Bull. II. 315 In order to obtain true orthochromatism it is always necessary to interpose a transparent yellow screen somewhere between the object and the plate in order to cut off a certain proportion of the blue and violet rays, to which the plates still remain relatively too sensitive. 1890 Ibid. III 220 We will give an easy method by which any gelatine dry-plate can be orthochromatized. 1891 W. J. STILLMAN in Nature (N. Y.) 15 Dec 448/3 'Orthochromatism' avoids the glaring contrasts which used to be made by photography between the color-values of blues, yellows, and reds.

The full ancient designation is ἡ ἀγία ὀρθόδοξος καθολικὴ ἀποστολικὴ ἀνατολικὴ ἐκκλησία, 'the holy, orthodox, catholic, apostolic, Eastern church'. The epithet 'Orthodox' was originally assumed to distinguish it from the various divisions of the Eastern Church, e.g. the Jacobite or Monophysite, Nestorian, etc., which separated on points of doctrine, and have not accepted all the decrees of the successive general councils, but it is sometimes used by historical writers as opposed to 'Catholic'. -ory¹, formerly -orie, a suffix forming sbs, originating in ONorm Fr and Afr -orie = Central Fr. -ore, as in glorie, gloire, which became the form for the adaptation of L. words in -oria, and subseq. of those in -orium, as vicloire, offertoire, oratoire, purgatoire; these also took in Eng the form -orie, later -ory, which thus came to be the normal Eng repr. of L. -oria, -orium, F -orie The most numerous of these are adaptations of L. neuter sbs in -orium, from adjs. in -orius (see -ORY 2), or formations of the same type. Usually, these denote a place or instrument used in some process, as crematory, directory, dormitory, factory, laboratory, lavatory, observatory, oratory, purgatory, refectory, repository, stillatory, sudatory, but occasionally they have other senses, as auditory, pronuntory, territory. In some learned or technical words the L. form in -ORIUM is retained; thus auditorium is differentiated from auditory, crematorium is more frequent than crematory. In a few words -ory is the suffix -y added to an agent-noun in -or, e. g. orator-y (the art of the orator), rector-y (the seat of a rector).

-ory², formerly -orie, a suffix forming adjs (whence also sbs), originating in ONF. -ori, -orie, and repr (sometimes through OF. -oir, -orie) L. -ori-us, -a, -um, itself a compound suffix consisting of the adj. formative -i-us added to derivative sbs. in -or (cf. soror sister, soror-i-us sisterly), chiefly agent-nouns in -or, -or (see -OR), but sometimes app from the cognate ppl. stem in -i, -s; e. g. accūsātor-i-us, suādor-i-us, dēcrētōr-i-us. As an agent-n in -or is possible from every L. vb, an adj. in L. -ori-us, Eng. -ory is also always possible, and is often in Eng. use when no corresponding L. adj. is recorded, and even when no agent-n. occurs, thus, we have compulsory, dispensatory, illusory, persuatory, without the agent-nouns compulsor, persu., and amatory, hortatory, perfusatory, predatory, where the L. verb is not even represented in English. Instead of -ory, the Eng. adj. has often the extended form -ORIAL, less frequently -ORIOUS

Oscuriis (= osturiis): see OSTOUR.

Ose, obs. form of OOZE

-ose, a suffix representing Latin -ōsus, forming adjs. from substantives, with the meaning 'full of', 'abounding in'; e.g. ann-ōsus full of years, clam-ōsus screaming, cōpi-ōsus rich, pecūm-ōsus moneyed, religi-ōsus scrupulous. As a living suffix -ōsus came down to OF as -os, -us, later -ous, -eux, AF. and Eng. -ous (ME also -ows), which survives with pronunciation (-os). But from the 15th c. onward there was a tendency to alter -ous words to -ose after L., as seen in such forms as ambitiose, gloriose, malitiose, compose, virtuose, zelose. None of these displaced the earlier forms in -ous; but a few words formed directly from L. from the 15th c onward have taken their place in the language, as bellicose, globose (15th c.), jocose, morose, verbose (17th c.), ovose (18th c.), grandiose, pliose (19th c.). In a few cases -ous and -ose forms are both in use, e.g. acerosus, acerosus, acinosus, acinosus, those in -ose being more technical. Originally these words have the stress on the suffix, joco se, morose, but this is not always maintained in more recent usage, esp. in words of more than two syllables. Nouns of state from these adjs., as from those in -ous, end in -osity. globoseity, verbosity.

-ose, Chem., a suffix originating in the ending of the word glucose, and employed in forming the names of the related carbo-hydrates, saccharose and cellulose, with the isomers of these three, as dextrose, laevulose, dambase, galactose, mannitose; lactose, maltose, melezitose, melitose, neycose, synanthrose, trehalose; amylase, etc.

These formations are due to the French chemists, and the earlier of them appeared first as Fr. words. Glucose was so named by the committee of the Académie des Sciences (Thénard, Gay Lussac, Biot, Dumas), who reported 16 July 1806 upon the memoir of Peligot 'il résulte que le sucre de raisin, celui d'amidon, celui de diabète, et celui de miel constituent un seul corps, que nous proposons d'appeler glucose. (Note. γλυκος [mispr. -yos], moût, vin doux.)' Comptes Rendus VII 106 (1838). Glucose was thus merely a frenchified representation of the Gr. word γλυκος 'must, sweet wine, sweetness', with u for eu and -ose for -os (Littre's assumption that the term was derived from γλυκος sweet, in accordance with which he essayed to alter it to glycose, was thus historically erroneous.) The name cellulose was given by Brongniart, Pelouze, and Dumas, in reporting upon the memoir of Payen, 14 Jan 1839. 'En effet, il y a dans les bois le tissu primitif, isomère avec l'amidon, que nous appellerons cellulose, et de plus une matière qui remplit les cellules, et qui constitue la matière ligneuse véritable' C. R. VIII. 51 (1839). Cellulose was thus formed on cellule, but there is no evidence that its inventors thought of a L. adj. cellulosus*; and app. the ending -ose was given simply to match glucose. It appears from other statements that the actual author of glucose, and presumably also of cellulose, was Dumas, the rapporteur of the committee. The ending -ose was soon extended; contractions of laevo-glucose (Berthelot) and dextro-glucose (Kekulé) gave laevulose and dextrose, and the forms lactose, melitose, etc. followed.

-osis, suffix, representing Gr. -osis, originating in the addition of the general suffix -osis, forming verbal nouns of action or condition, to derivative vbs. in -ō- from adj. and sb. stems or combining forms in o-. e.g. ἀμαυρωσις darkening, obscuration of sight, ἀμαυρωσις f. ἀμαυρό-ω to darken, f. ἀμαυρός dark; μεταμορφωσις transformation, f. μεταμορφό-ω, f. μετά + μορφή form. Many such words also were formed directly from the sbs or adjs. themselves, or their compounds, without the intervention of a v. in -ō-, e.g. ἀνθράκωσις malignant ulcer, anthracosis, f. ἀνθράξ, ἀνθράκω-ω, carbuncle, ἐξοστωσις outgrowth of bone, exostosis, f. ἐξ out + ὀστέον bone.

Many of these Greek terms have been adopted in Latin ancient or modern, whence they have passed into English use, e.g. anastomosis, apophysis, metamorphosis, rhetorical terms, as anadiplosis, mnosis, and esp. medical terms, as amaurosis, anachylosis, cyphosis, exostosis, sclerosis, thrombosis, etc. On the analogy of these last, others have been freely formed in mod.L., Eng., and other modern langs., from Greek elements, as chlorosis, cyranosis, ichthyosis, trichinosis, less frequently from Latin, as pediculosis, tuberculosis. The stress is etymologically -ō- sis; but popular use has shifted it in metano rphosis, so anamo rphosis. The Ger form of the ending is also -osis, the French is -ose

Osmate, Chem., another form of OSMIATE.

Osmazome (o'smāzōm, o'z-). Chem. [a. F. osmazōme (1812 in Hatz.-Darm.), irreg. f. Gr. ὀσμή scent + ζωμός soup, sauce.] The name given by Thénard to that part of the aqueous extract of meat which is soluble in alcohol and contains those constituents of the flesh which determine its taste and smell.

1819 J. G. CHILDREN Chem. Anal. 307 Osmazome is obtained from muscle; it has a brownish yellow colour, and the flavour and smell of broth. According to Dr Thomson, it is very doubtful if osmazome be any thing but fibrin, slightly altered by solution in water 1859 Lewes Phys. Com. Life I 11 152 It is this osmazome, developed during the process of cooking, which gives their characteristic flavours to beef, mutton, goat-flesh, and birds, etc.

Hence Osmazomata, Osmazomatous adjs [improp. for osmazo mta*, osmazo mous*, as if from ὀσμα, ὀσματ- that which is girded], of the nature of osmazome, connected with or pertaining to the flavouring of meat.

Pliny's ossifraga is identified by modern ornithologists with the Lammergeyer, but it was rendered by Du Pontet in F. ofraye, and by Holland 'ofraye or osprey', and the transference of the name from the Lammergeyer to the Fishhawk must have occurred at an early date, as osprey actually represents ossifraga. 2. A milliner's name for an egret plume worn as an ornament on a lady's hat or bonnet; sometimes, like agrette, extended to an artificial plume or other ornament used for the same purpose. (It has been thought that this erroneous use arose from associating osprey with spray.)

Ossature (o sätüri) [a. Fr. ossature skeleton, f. L. os, oss- bone + -ature, from ppl and adj. stems in -at-, as- curat-ure, onat-ure].

1. The arrangement and disposition of the bones of the skeleton. rare.

Osse, oss (os), v. Now dial. [Found in w. midl. dialect in 14th c., and still common from the Welsh Border to Cumberland and Northampton, much affected by Ph. Holland in his versions of Latin authors, to render ossum and its synonyms, as is Osse sb. to render osmen. The latter has not been found in previous writers, though Holland (who, as Head Master of Coventry Free School, had opportunity of knowing the facts) refers to both sb and vb. as old words well known in the North. (See Osse sb. quot. 1600.) According to the known evidence, the sb appears to be derived from the vb, but the origin of both is involved in obscurity.]

Holland was confirmed in his use of these words by believing them to be derived from Gr. ὄσσα 'ominous voice or sound, prophecy, premonition', the coincidence of which and its vb ὄσσειν 'to presage, foretoken, forebode' with osse sb and vb is certainly very remarkable; yet it is impossible that an English vb. in popular use in the 14th c. could be derived from Greek without many intermediate links of which in this case none are found. The verb is also used in mod. colloquial Welsh as osio 'to give token of, show promise of', but in the opinion of Prof. Rhys and Dr. Silvan Evans, this is merely a recent adoption from the adjacent English dialects. (Ray's conjecture of identity with F. osier 'to dare' (founded on a modern dialect use), is phonetically and historically futile.)

Whereas that other word (Osse) is very significant, and in analogie equivalent to (Omen). I mervell much therefore, why it is thought either strange and new (seeing it is English, used no doubt commonly in times past, and at this day current in the North-parts, where the people haply are more observant of such presages) rather than many other forraigne words, brought into our language, and launged with the English. or why it should be condemned as absonant and not pleasing to the eare, more than ososa in Greek from whence, who seeth not (Osse and Ossing both) are derived. 1601 — Pliny E. pl. The ossifraga of Pliny is identified by modern naturalists with the Lammergeyer, which swallows and digests bones, and is said to let them fall from a great height upon rocks and stones so as to break them. But the name appears to have been early transferred in France and England to the Fish-hawk, to which, in its assumed modern forms osfraga, osprey, it is now applied. Ossifraga has subsequently been taken directly from the L. form, either simply to render the L. or to name the bird held to be meant by Pliny, but has sometimes been used merely as a synonym of OSPREY (In modern Ornithology, Ossifraga has been awkwardly taken by Bonaparte as generic name of the Giant Fulmar, a bird of the petrel family.) oper, 2-6 other, 4-5 opere, othere, othar, oþr(e), 4-6 uthar, 6 oder, -ur. β 4 oiper, oithar. [The OE. word for 'or' (F. ou, L. aut, and sive or vel, G. oder) was oððe, earlier oðða (also oðða) = Goth. aiþþau, OS epþo, oðða, OHG. eddo, edo, later odo, MHG. ode, oder, Ger. oder The alternative 'either .. or' was expressed by oððe oððe This form was superseded c1130 by other (first in O. E. Chron. anno 1127, last example of oððe, in a sentence in which oder also occurs, 1131) The MS. of the OE. transl. of Περί διδασκων (1200-1225) has regularly oððer for OE. oððe

Though the date of the first appearance of this conj is so narrowly defined, its actual source remains a debated question It has been held to be identical with the adv pron OTHER (see prec.) and (more frequently) with the adv pron OTHER, OE ðawæder, duðer, oðer. Both these pron words were indeed in OE used anticipatively, to introduce the alternative oððe oððe (see OTHER adv pron B 1 b, OTHER adv pron 1 b), but there is no trace in OE of duðer (duðer or duðer taking the place of the first member of the alternative oððe oððe), much less of both members, and least of all of the simple conj oððe. On the contrary, the simple conj remained invariably oððe, and the alternative (so far as the evidence shows) oððe oððe, down to the abrupt substitution of other c1130 It is true that in the 12th c. in northern, north midl, and e-midl Eng. auþer, ouþer, began to take the place of other as first member of the alternative other other or other or (the second remaining as or, less usually other, just as later still in Wyclif and Chaucer) either became the midland form of the first member, but these were changes several centuries later than the substitution of other for oððe c1130, with which they have no historical connexion It seems more probable that the other or other of 1130 was a modification of oððe itself, due to some association with words in -er, oððe being a stressless word was probably reduced in pronunciation to ode (cf. OE. nales from nales, althen (1140) from alþan, etc.) Thus we are reminded of the parallelism of development between HG eddo, edo, odo, ode, oder, and OE. oðða, oðða, oððe, (oððe), oðer or other, and are led to suspect, for the r of German

III. As auxiliary of predication.

5. The general verb to express duty or obligation of any kind; strictly used of moral obligation, but also with various weaker shades of meaning, expressing what is befitting, proper, correct, advisable, or naturally expected. Only in pa. t. (indic or subj.), which may be either past or present in meaning (The only current use in standard Eng.)

The subject is properly the person (or thing) bound by the obligation, which latter is expressed by a following infinitive (with, formerly also without, to), sometimes omitted by ellipsis. Followed by a passive infinitive, it expresses obligation on the part of some undefined or unexpressed agent, the subject in this case being the person, etc. to whom the obligation is due (e. g. parents ought to be honoured = it is a duty to honour parents).

a. In past sense. = Owed it to duty, was (were) bound or under obligation (to do something). Usually, now only, in dependent clause, corresponding to a preceding past tense in principal clause he said you ought = he said it was your duty. (Cf. c below.)

Eng.* v. II. 592 To convince him that he ought to stay where he was *c*1894 LAW Times XCIII 414/2 He [the judge] did not think that the defendant ought to be kept in prison any longer.

b. In present sense. = Am (is, are) bound or under obligation; you ought to do it = it is your duty to do it; it ought to be done = it is right that it should be done, it is a duty (or some one's duty) to do it. (The most frequent use throughout. Formerly expressed by the pres. t. Owe v. 5.)

This appears to be orig. the pa. subj. (which in ME and mod Eng. has the same form as the indic) used first in hypothetical or general cases, e. g. Ought one to tell the truth under all circumstances? If it should rain, he ought not to go. If he cannot go to-day, he ought to go to-morrow. Thence, in definite present sense, as Tell me what I ought to do now. The use of the pa. subj. softens the form of the expression, of the parallel you should for it is your duty, also would you for will you, might I for may I; could you for can you

1. A unit of weight, originally, as still in Troy weight, the twelfth of a pound, but in avoirdupois or ordinary goods weight the sixteenth of the pound

The Troy ounce consists of 480 grains, and is divided into 80 pennyweights; the avoirdupois ounce contains 437.5
 grains, and is divided into 16 drams. Fluid ounce, a measure of capacity, containing an avoird. ounce of distilled water at 62° Fahr. (= 28.4 cubic centimetres). In the United States the fluid ounce is the quarter of a gill or 28th part of a gallon (= 29.57 cubic centimetres), containing 456.033 grains of distilled water at its maximum density. It is thus an aliquot part of the pint, quart, and gallon, which the British fluid ounce is not.

Ourself (quæself), pron Forms: see OUR and SELF. [A parallel formation to next, with self instead of selves, appearing first in 14th c.]

It may have arisen out of our selven, through our selve, our selfe, finally with e mute, as in the infinitive of vbs (e.g. holden, holde, holdis); but, on the other hand, it may have been a distinct formation, with the uninflected self (cf. myself, ourself, with my own, our own).

Emphatic and reflexive pronoun, corresponding to we, us, originally not differing in sense from OURSELVES; but subsequently differentiated, so as to be used mostly in those cases in which we refers to a single person or is not definitely plural; e.g. in royal, divine, or editorial utterance, or when used vaguely in the sense of one, oneself.

In mod. South Sc. oursel is collective, oursels is individual, e.g. 'we do everything oursel', but 'we'll settle it atween oursels'.

I. Emphatic. 1. Standing alone, as subject, as object direct or indirect, or in predicate after be, become, or the like

-ous, suffix, repr. L. -ūs (-a, -um), forming adjs., with the sense of 'abounding in, full of, characterized by, of the nature of', e.g. cōpi-ūs plentiful, copious, dol-ūs full of sorrow, dolorous, fām-ūs famous, gener-ūs distinguished by descent, generous, glōri-ūs full of glory, glorious, spīn-ūs full of thorns, thorny, spinous, visc-ūs of the nature of bird-lime, sticky, viscous, etc.

Latin stressed long ō passed in OFr. into a closer sound, intermediate between ō and u, which was variously written o or u, less commonly ou; hence L. adjs. in -ūs, which either came down in popular use, or were adopted at an early date, had in OF, forms in -os, or -us (-ous), e.g. cōveitos, -us, doleros, -us, envios, -us, glorios, -us, religios, -us. In the 13th c. the vowel-sound had changed to (ø) written eu, so that the suffix had now the form -eus (cōveit-eus, dolereus, envieus, glorieus, etc.); and this still later was written in the masc. -eux (cōveit-eux, envieus, glorieus, with fem. however in -euse), as still in modern F. In Anglo-Fr. and early ME, the forms were the same as in early OF. (cōveitos, -us, envios, -us, glorios, -us), but the vowel was soon identified with OE. long u, and like it written after 1300 ou (cōveitous, enviuous, glorious), the spelling ever since retained, though the sound has passed through (-i-, -us, -u-) to (-æ-, -æ-). This -ous, having thus become the form of the suffix in all words from Norman Fr., became the established type for all those of later introduction, whether adaptations of Fr. adjs. in -eus, -eux, or L. adjs. in -ūs (but see -OSE 1), or new formations on the analogy of these, from Fr., L., or other elements.

These new formations are numerous in the Romanic languages. In French they have been formed freely, not only from L. sbs. which had no such derivative in ancient L., but also from French words themselves of L. origin, and from mediæval and modern words from divers sources. Many of these new formations have, in earlier or later times, passed (with change of -eux, etc., to -ous) from French into English. Such is the history, for example, of advantageous, adventurous, conageous, dangerous, gelatinous, grievous, guminous, hazardous, hideous, joyous, lecherous, mainous, mountainous, orguillous, pulpous, ravenous, riotous, slandorous. This process has been continued in Eng. itself, where new adjs. in -ous have been formed, not only on Latin, Greek, and Romanic bases, but also on native Eng. words and on some of obscure origin; e.g. blustrious, boisterous, burdenous, feverous, murderous, poisonous, shumberous, thunderous, timous, troubulous, wondrous.

In some words in late or med. L. the ending -ūs was added to an adj., or at least a form in -ūs was found beside the simple adjective, e.g. decor-ūs, decorōs-ūs, dub-ūs, dubōs-ūs, in It. decoro, decoroso, dubbio, dubbioso. In the Romanic languages a few new forms of this kind appear; e.g. L. pi-ūs, F. pi-eux (as if from pi-ūs*). But in English, this addition of the suffix has been greatly developed, and has become the ordinary mode of anglicizing L. adjs. of many kinds, esp. those in -eus, -ius, -us, -er, -ris, -āx, -āci, -ōx, -ōci, -endus, -ulus, -vorus, -ōrus, e.g. aque-ous, igne-ous, extirpation-ous, herbaceous, consci-ous, obvi-ous, vari-ous, ardū-ous, exigu-ous, adulter-ous, artificer-ous, armiger-ous, alacri-ous, hilar-ous, illustr-ous, capaci-ous, feroci-ous, stupend-ous, garrul-ous, omnivorous, sonorous.

This tendency to represent a L. adj. by an Eng. form in -ous may have been strengthened by the fact that the 'dictionary-form' of the L. adj. is the nom. sing. masc., and that this in the majority of adjs. ends in -us, the Eng. pronunciation of which is the same as that of the Eng. word in -ous, so that the latter to the cursory observer appears to be merely an Eng. spelling of the L. It is evident however that igne-ous, for example, answers not only to L. igne-ous, but to igne-a, igne-um, etc., and that the -ous is an additional element. And in comparing alacri-ous with alacer, hilar-ous with hilaris, capaci-ous with capax, capāci, the suffixal nature of the -ous is manifest.

b. In some words, -ous is a corruption of another suffix, e.g. in righteous, wrongous, courteous, gorgeous; in others, as bounteous, a contraction of an earlier suffix has taken place before -ous: see -EOUS.

c. In Chem, adjectives in -ous, formed on the names of elements, indicate acids and other compounds containing a larger proportion of the element in question than those expressed by an adj. in -ic: e.g. chlorous acid, sulphurous acid, cuprous oxide, ferrous salts, etc.: see -IO 1 b.

d. Nouns of quality from adjs. in -ous (however derived), are regularly formed in -ousness, as covetousness, consciousness, gorgeousness, righteousness; those from L. -ūs have sometimes forms in -osity, as curiosity, generosity, porosity, viscosity; but this termination more frequently accompanies adjs. in -OSE 1.

Out, obs. form of OUGHT, AUGHT.

Out, in comb. is used with substantives, with verbs and their derivatives, and with other adverbs.
 In OE. ut adv. was already prefixed (r) to ordinary sbs in the sense 'that is without', 'out lying', 'external'; as in ut-land a country that is out, a distant or foreign land, ut-her an army belonging to or coming from without, a foreign army, (r) to verbal sbs and nouns of action and agent-nouns derived from verbal roots, as ut-far, ut-faren, ut-faren, ut-gang, going out, exit, departure, ut-dref expulsion, ut-drefen one who drives out, ut-lad carriage out, exportation, ut-ryne running out, excursion, expiry; (r) to elements forming adjs., either related to the sbs in ut, as ut-land, ut-landsc, outlandish, foreign, or derived from vbs (ppl. adjs.), ut-terende out-running, purgative. In these 'nominal compounds' the stress was always on the prefix.

With verbs, ut like other adverbs formed separable collocations or semi-compounds, in which the position of the adv. was shifted according to the construction of the sentence, as in the separable compound verbs of modern German (although in OE the order was not yet so rigid). Thus, ut followed the vb in the imperative, as gā ut! adā ut þone bēam, and in the pres. and pa. indicative in the principal sentence, as he cymþ ut, he eode ut, ða fūgon ut ut. But in the dependent sentence, and in all other moods or parts of the vb., including the infinitive and pples., and all nominal derivatives, the adv. stood immediately in front of the vb, thus ða he ut cymþ when he comes out, gā he ut cyme if he come out, nū wille we ut gān now will we go out, ut gāgendū dām unðrpe on the month going out. In OE the adv. was regularly written separate, but in translations from Latin, compound verbs in ex- were sometimes rendered by compound vbs in ut- in which the adv. was not only joined, but even retained before the vb in the principal sentence. e.g. Ps. xviii. 5, 'in omnem terram exivit sonus eorum', Vesp. Ps. 'in all eorðan utedeð swoeg heara'. The regular position of ut before the vb. in the inf., gerund, and pples., naturally tended to make the collocation pass into a combination, esp. when these were used as sbs. or adjs.; and this is the cause why outing, outgoer, outgone belong in meaning to go out, ut-stretching, ut-stretched to st etch out, outgrowing, outgrowth to grow out, outlook, outlooker to look out. It is only in later Eng. that such collocations as a going-out dress, a clearing-out of cupboards, the bringers-out of a new play, a well thought out article, have become possible.

As to the verbs themselves, in ME., usage became more lax. On the one hand, the adv. began to be placed after or away from the vb in the subordinate sentence, the infinitive, etc., on the other hand the older usage of the inf. in ut gān, and the like, was often extended to the indicative, so that we find he out yede, the blod out brast. This was partly due to a general levelling and loss of old syntactical distinctions, so that beside he sprang out and then sprang he out, it became allowable also to say he out sprang and out sprang he, in both of which the adv. stands before the vb. These novelties in word order were especially employed by metrical writers as facilitating the exigencies of rhythm and rime, and it is chiefly in metrical compositions that they are found. But they also occur in translations from Latin, as e.g. in the works of Wyclif, in which L. vbs in ex- are constantly rendered by Eng. verbs preceded by out. In ME. the elements were still commonly separated in writing; but modern editors have usually hyphenated these collocations as compounds.

As a result of these various causes, there are numerous quasi-compound vbs. in out- in occasional use, chiefly poetical, in precisely the same sense as the ordinary prose form in which the simple verb is followed by the adv., e.g. out pour = pour out. Not unfrequently, moreover, where out stands before a vb. as a mere metrical or poetical inversion, as in 'A frightful clamour from the wall out broke', 'Out went the townsmen all in starch', the two words, though merely inversions of broke out, went out, are hyphenated as if compounds. The tendency so to treat them is probably strengthened by the existence of outbreak (sb.), outbreaker, outbreaking, outbroken, outcome, outcoming, and the like. But in these latter the position of the adv. is original, and the stress is on out, while in out broke, out went, the stress is on the vb.

On these accounts it is difficult to deal satisfactorily with the hyphenated quasi-compounds in out-. Such as seem of importance, or occur as senses of *out-*verbs having other senses, are given among the Main words (where it is often indicated that they are not true compounds, or are only poetical), others are given in this article, but no attempt has been made to exhaust them. The same is true of vbl sbs, and ppl. adjs. in -ing, ppl. adjs. in -ed, -en, etc., and agent nouns in -er, which are permanent possibilities from any verb that can be followed by out, as in outing, out-gone, outgoer, from go out.

True compound vbs in out- are those in which it imparts the sense of outdoing, surpassing, exceeding, or beating in some action, as in outlive, outbid, outnumber, outface, and the various extensions of these contained in C. II. These are of later origin: a very few (e.g. outlive, outoffer = outbid, outpass) appear in the end of the 15th c., they increase gradually during the 16th c. (outrun in Tindale, outcry, out-cast, outgo, outdrive, outrime, outrow, in Palgr.) and become numerous only c. 1600, being freely and boldly employed by Shakspeare, who is our earliest authority for many of them, including the curious group typified by 'to outfrown frowns', 'to out-Herod Herod'. It is not very clear how this use arose, or to what sense of out it is to be referred. But the earlier of these *out-*compounds were in nearly every instance preceded by a form with over-. Thus outlive (1472) was preceded in same sense by overlive (in OE.) = F. survivre; outpass in 'the Water of Hamys outpassage his boundys' (1494), was preceded by overpass = F. surpasser. It would seem therefore that out- has here the sense of 'beyond'. It is possible however that in outlive there entered in some association with Out 6 b, 23, as if it were 'to live to see another out' or 'at an end'. One who outbids another, bids beyond his rival until he drives him out of the contest. Cf. also the relation of the two notions in 'the ship outode the storm', and 'the horseman outode his pursuers', or 'he outode all competitors in the race'.

A. Out- in comb. forming sbs

I. in combination with ordinary sbs.
 Of these a few existed already in OE., e.g. ut-land outside or outlying land, foreign land, Out-land, ut-gār-seg the outer ocean (see OCEAN), ut-gemene extreme boundary, ut-healf external side, outside, ut-weald outlying wood; ut-her foreign army, ut-wicing foreign pirate or viking. The number of these has in later times been greatly increased. Those of longer standing are written as single words; in the more recent, the two elements are usually hyphenated, but they are also sometimes written separately, in which case out functions as an adj. = 'external, exterior, outlying, outer': see OUT a. As the meaning is the same either way, the separation or hyphenation of the two elements is in many cases optional. (Cf. BACK-.)

23. a. In most of the groups 18-22, the compound vb. in out- may be cognate with the object, being formed either on the simple verb belonging to the object, or directly on the object itself, usually unchanged, but sometimes with a verbal ending (e.g. -ize). The object may be a person or a thing, and the sense is 'to outdo the agent in his own sphere or work', or 'to exceed or surpass the action, quality, or other thing'. Our earliest examples of this are from Shakspeare, who has 'out-frowne Fortune's frowne', and 'out-villain'd villanie'; it is rare in the 17th c., but greatly used in the 19th, when also those formed on adjs appear. Thus, formed on vbs, to out-cook all cookery, out-beg a beggar, out-blunder former blunders, out-complete competition or competitors, out-rival a rival or rivalry. From adjs, to out-old the old, out-royal royalty. From sbs, to out-ambush ambushes, out-balderdash balderdash, out-blarney blarney, out-calvinize Calvinism, out-famine famine, out-fiction fiction, out-horror all horrors, out-bishop the bishop, out-devil the devil, out-jingo the jingo, out-saint the saint, out-usure the usurer. A few examples are added in chronological order to show the development of this usage.

DAVIES Muse's Sacrif (1878) 63 So hath a Painter licence too, to paint A Saint like face, till it the Saint out saint. 1647 CHARLTON *Contempl. b. Hence esp. with proper names of persons, nations, sects, etc., in the sense of 'to outdo the person, etc., in question in his special attribute'. The classical example is Shakespeare's OUT-HEROD Herod; a few instances are found in the 17th c., esp. in Fuller, and in the 18th c. in Swift; but the vast development of this, as of so many other Shaksperian usages, belongs to the 19th c., in which such expressions have been used almost without limit. Examples are out-Achitophel, Alexander, Bentley, Boniface, Bonner, Brutus, Darwin, Milton, Mormon, Nero, Ottoman, Quixote, Sternhold, Tunon, Toby, Trollope, Turk, Zola, etc.; and, with verbal ending, out-Calvinize, Germanize, Gothamize, Hobbesize, Pantagruelize, etc. A few examples follow in chronological order to illustrate the growth of the usage.

† Outas, outes, sb. Obs. Forms: 3 uthes, -hes, -hest, 4 outhyses, 5 out(e)hes, outhese, 5-6 outas, 5-7 outes, 6 owias, 7 outis. [Early ME ūthēs, whence later outhes, -hes, and (with shortening of unstressed second element) outes, outis, outas; also, in 13th c., ūthest. App. representing an OE. ūt-hās*, f. ūt out + hās command, bidding, *calling upon (any one) by name (from hātan to call by name, call upon), which also had in 13th c. the two forms hās, hest see HEST sb.

Common in 13th c. in legal documents in the Latin forms uthesum, hulthesum, hutesum, and later huesum. These have been sometimes thought to be the source of the ME. word, and to be themselves of OF. origin, derived from huer, huer, to cry, hū, hude cry (hū = cri, hue and cry), which suits the sense perfectly. But hutesum cannot be etymologically accounted for from this source, nor is the word known in any form, Latin or vernacular, outside England. On the other hand, hutesum as a latinization of ME ūthēs is quite in order. It is very likely, however, that hutesum and (still more) huesum are Norman Fr. alterations, due to association with huts, hu, hude. Uthēs, uthes are also most easily explained as Anglo-Norman formations from hutesum. As to the sense, ūthēs could hardly mean 'outcry', but might well be the 'calling upon' people to the pursuit of a thief or other ill doer, which is the sense in the oldest and other of the quotes (Compare the expressions levare clamorem, levare hutesum, lever le hu.)

An outcry, raised against a thief or the like, hue and cry; also, outcry generally, clamour.
